THAI TERM GLOSSARY

Nakhon Nayok is an ancient town since Dhavaravadi period, assumed from its remaining wall and moat in Tambon Dong Lakhon. The town name "Nakhon Nayok" is found in artefact from Ayutthaya period as an eastern forefront of battles during the reign of King U-Thong. In 1894, King Rama V of Rattanakosin had redesigned the administrative structure and that made Nakhon Nayok part of province. Until 1902, the position of ruler was replaced by governor. Nakhon Nayok was combined as part of Prachin Buri and Saraburi during 1943-1946, before it was set up as a province eventually. Formerly, Nakhon Nayok was known as "Ban Na". It was said that during Ayutthaya period, the province was blanketed with jungle. Its high plain made it difficult to thrive on farming. Moreover, pandemic of malaria had driven people to else where, leaving Ban Na as empty town. When the King had realized such difficulty, he wiped the rice tax. This had attracted people to come back, making Ban Na a big community again. So, the people called this city "Mueang Nayok" or literary the city of prime minister.

Chao Pho Khun Dan Shrine

Chao Pho Khun Dan Shrine (ศาลเจ้าพ่อขุนด่าน)

The sacred spirit of Chao Pho Khun Dan earns great respect from the people. Historically, he was chief of Nakhon Nayok check point during Ayutthaya period. In 1767, while King Naresuan the Great was fighting against Burmese Army, Khmer Army had invaded and captured people in Prachin Buri and around and heading back to Cambodia. The Khmer Army has occupied Prachin Buri and Nakhon Nayok, so Khun Dan and other people escaped to Khao Cha-ngok and then came back to beat the Khmer Army. Legend said that during World War II, Japanese Army has used Khao Cha-ngok as a stronghold and destroyed the shrine, so the spirit has magically killed a number of Japanese soldier.

Phra Buddha Chai (พระพุทธรูป)

It can be dated back to Dhavaravadi and Khmer era. The hill of Dong Lakhon or Dong Yai acquires 6 sq. kms. Inside is an ancient town called Dong Lek, which is an oval shaped town lying rather west of the hill. The town is ringed by two walls and a moat, like most town in Dhavaravadi period. This town

Namtok Lan Rak or Namtok Hin Kong

is probably the residential area of the rulers, while the people should scatter around. The town prosperity can be divided obviously into two periods. The first period, 9th-11th century, the town was dominated by Dhavaravadi culture. The second period, 12th-14th century, it had Khmer culture and pre-Ayutthaya culture. By the 14th century, people of Dong Lakhon might migrate and resettle along main rivers in Nakhon Nayok. The city might be related to Si Mahosot Town in Prachinburi, which is only 55 kilometres away. Antique found around the site include broken terra cotta and blue ceramic, glass beads, stone beads, terra cotta coins, lead sheets, bronze earrings, gold leaf, gold-plated Buddha Image head, laterite stupa, bronze rings and bracelets.

Legend says this city once was a secret place of Khmer queen which was difficult for outsider to get in. Lush jungle blanketing around made it a maze where people can easily get lost inside. During holy days, people always hear traditional music like classical dance is performing in the palace. So they call the place Dong Lakhon or "the jungle of classical dance". Another clue says Dong Lakhon may derive from Dong Nakhon or the jungle city. The Fine Art Department has registered it as National Ancient Site on March 8th, 1935.

TOURIST’S TREKKING TIPS

Preparation for exploring the jungle

- Study about the destinations for preparing proper equipments as each destination provide different facilities.
- Wear comfortable attire but not too loose. Prepare hat, sock, and jacket in natural hues such as green, brown, blue, grey or black.
- Use light, necessary and practical gears such as backpack, tent, sleeping back, food, drinking water, flysheet, medicines, torch, knife, compass, jacket, shoes or boots, insect repellent, and other proper stuffs.

-Do not use perfume during the trip as it may attract insects. Bee may be attracted by sweet fragrance and that may harm you. Wildlife may realize that smell and never come back again.

GUIDELINE FORTREKKING TOURIST

-Use only designated trail or area to avoid damaging the nature or getting lost.

-Avoid causing wild fire from setting fire or littering cigarette.
